Body

"It's like being punched in the gut. My heart drops to my stomach when I realize he has tweeted about me again. The president of the United States is calling me names to the entire world. He's demeaning me and my career."

Lisa Page, former FBI lawyer who became a frequent target of Donald Trump after criticizing him during his candidacy in 2016, ending nearly two years of public silence

"Too little has been done before, almost nothing. But we'll go stadium by stadium, sector by sector, and identify these people to keep them out of there."

Luigi De Siervo, CEO of Italy's top soccer league, on the rampant racism among soccer fans

"There are several reasons we find this highly problematic."

Olav Njoelstad, director of the Norwegian Nobel Institute. He was troubled that Ethiopian PM Abiy Ahmed, the 2019 Nobel Peace Prize winner, won't attend any event next week where he could be asked questions publicly. Ethiopia has seen violent unrest

"I think people are underestimating the force of angry kids. If they want us to stop being angry, then maybe they should stop making us angry."

Climate activist Greta Thunberg, on criticism from some leaders about the tone of her speeches

"This is not some sordid sex story; this is a story of being trafficked. This is a story of abuse, and this is a story of your guys' royalty."

Virginia Roberts Giuffre, speaking to the BBC in an hour-long documentary. The American has claimed she was forced to have sex with Britain's Prince Andrew when she was 17
